I totally agree. Attached are photos of some of our “clusters”. The Cap flotilla is currently in Filucy Bay, Pierce county.

The “new boat with 4” was on state-land next to the Sesko property in Bremerton, Kitsap County. DNR’s program removed three vessels off the beach there, caused the vessel owner to remove a fourth and the adjacent property owner to remove 3 or 4. One of our big derelict vessels, the Ked, is still offshore. Around the time we cleaned up the beach another derelict boat was tied to the outside of the Ked, where it promptly sank.

Interesting location. A lot of those are probably historic. My point in the presentation was that a) it could be seen from google earth, b) abandoned vessels tend to cluster. If you allow one, pretty soon you'll have a bunch (like eagle harbor) and c) how can you convince the public that their plastic bag or cigarette butt is a problem if you allow shoreline uses like that (same point on the slide of the cruise ship in Maui. The passenger launches to Lahaina pass within a few hundred feet of that wreck.)

One of our staff attended the submerged lands conference (or another conference?) in New York and they took a tour past the abandoned shipyard. They reportedly seemed happy about their disposition of the vessels (mass graveyard)...
